"IN DIJON—"

By JACK DE WITT
© McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

MIKE DELANEY of the plain clothes detail of the police department was at work in a white bread.

"Hello, sweetheart tonight, Mike?" the proprietress was heard at him in friendly reminiscence by Lieutenant Reese.

Lieutenant Reese looked up from the menus, reports and "Wanted" circulars on his desk and began perusing the large face beamed.

"Anna's a sweet girl and so foolish," Reese said to Police Chief Bigelow.

"Injun" quarried the plain clothes officer like a lump of coal, and Mike's face took on a happy memory. "You mean Injun is Frankie Nora, I was in Dijon with her in May."

"Ever meet the Bluebeard of Dijon?" asked the lieutenant, without humor.

Mike Delaney eyed the officer suspiciously.

"What you getting at?" he wanted to know before committing himself.

"Just this," the lieutenant thrust a paper towards him. "First pickup order we ever got from a foreign country, and there frigs go for rewards, too. Seven hundred Fifteen hundred American dollars reward for the Bluebeard of Dijon."

Mike Delaney read hurriedly.

"They seem to think this mug's in this town," he said to the lieutenant.

"Yeah," agreed the desk officer without enthusiasm, "but they have been trying to trail him for five years. No chance pickin' him now. Killed a lotta women, didn't he? I didn't read it carefully."

Mike Delaney was reading aloud—"Wanted for Murder, Nicholas Lamoire. The Bluebeard of Dijon. Killed six women and fled before collecting insurance for last victim. The trail of this man has been followed in Spain, Italy, Australia, Hawaii, and Trinidad —where it was lost five years ago. Because of the suspicion of this circular, No photograph of Lamoire is available. When last known in Dijon—where he was the proprietor of his life in the restaurant business, he was 5 feet 9 inches tall. Weight 190 pounds. Dark hair and eyes. His appearance has undoubtedly changed considerably but he may be readily identified by a triangular scar, result of a knife wound, two inches below the point of his right shoulder blade. He may be employed in a restaurant in your city and he may be the proprietor of a restaurant of the better type."

Delaney paused in his reading. The lieutenant observed: "How you going to identify him from that description after three years? Get fat by now, if he works in restaurants."

Delaney was still thinking of Dijon when he reached the sidewalk. Suddenly he laughed aloud.

It was 7:30 when Mike Delaney presented his broad shoulders in the doorway of a neat suburban cottage.

Jan Morgan met him at the door.

"Late, Mr. Delaney. Fifteen minutes late. Give an account."

Mike Delaney said nothing. He usually went tongue-tied for the first few minutes in Ann Morgan's company anyway. When little people were moving through downtown traffic again, and when Ann had cuddled comfortably close to him, he said half musingly:

"If we had fifteen hundred dollars we could get that bungalow in the Sunset addition and make a good, big down payment to the real estate people—"

"Mike Delaney," the girl interrupted him, "quit worrying about that bungalow."

The subject ended there. Ann was dreaming her dreams; Mike was dreaming his. Both dreams were very similar when he piloted her through the garishly lighted doorway of a downtown restaurant. Gilded letters on the restaurant window announced that the place specialized in French cooking.

When the waiter brought soup and turned with a dexterous flip of his napkin to leave the booth, a sharp ejaculation from Mike Delaney brought him about swiftly.

Mike Delaney was holding by the tail—suspended above his plate—the longdrenched body of a dead mouse.

"I'll show it to every customer in the place," he sputtered.

"Mouse, Mouse—" stammered the waiter, but before the servant could control his quivering vocal chords he was brushed roughly aside by the head waiter.

"Please—please," he begged, "I will see the management. Please. Fifteen dollars—twenty dollars—please no police, mister."

Eventually Mike Delaney allowed himself to be pacified by none other than the proprietor.

As they walked toward another restaurant, Ann said: "But you shouldn't have taken his money, Mike. You bashful—"

"Teach him a lesson," her companion assured her. "Forty dollars is a lot of money to a mug like that. I'll tell him waiter until tomorrow then take it back."

The next restaurant Mike Delaney chose was a dump. The waiter went through the preliminaries with expert, casual dispatch. After the soup was

Traditional Life Span of 70 Passed by Many

Revolutionary conclusions reached by people who have lived to be 100 were suggested by new studies of death-rate statistics to-night by Dr. Louis I. Dublin, statistician of the Metropolitan Life Insurance company.

Dr. Dublin concluded that the chief cause of longevity in individual lives is what kind of constitution is acquired during one's first 15 years, rather than whether in that living to be ninety or one hundred promises to be the exception.

Many experts have suspected, indeed, that this life span might be increased by some decades, and alive many children who are naturally weak and sickly can be expected to live long anyway.

The new Southern investigation is the first ever made which presents the conclusion that may be wrong. British children born in each decade since 1841 are found to live a little longer than children born in the previous decade.

Nothing seems to influence this except the year of birth, which implies that what happens to children under fifteen seems to be the other factor in living long or dying early. Extension of the same computations to future decades seems to indicate that increased longevities of the people now being born may expect to live beyond ninety.

The most famous race in t country is the Kentucky Derby run at Louisville, Ky., annually on the first Saturday after that of England. Held in May, it is usually run in the middle of the month. Gather Eggs Often Hatching eggs should be gathered often, three times per day at least in cold weather if the weather is cold so as to prevent chilling. Frequent gathering will also prevent them from becoming dirty. They should be placed at once in the basement or cellar, or other room where the temperature ranges between 45 and 65 degrees. They should not be kept long before setting —should be delivered twice per week to a hatchery if they are sold for that. If properly cared for, eggs will hatch with fair success at home if 10 to 12 days old and one can take a chance on them that old or even older, if one is hatching his own eggs for himself but each day they are held tends to curtail hatchability.—Missouri Farmer.

Grade A and B Eggs

The chief difference between Grade A eggs and Grade B eggs is in the firmness of their whites, according to a recent statement issued by Charles H. Baldwin, New York commissioner of agriculture and markets. In addition to having less firm whites, the Grade B eggs have more watery whites, the commissioner said. The decrease in the water is caused by evaporation. Food values of Grade A eggs are but slightly higher than those classed as Grade B.

Constipated People Find Speedy Relief By Adding Tasty New Bread To Diet

Homebuyer is a Local Example of the Beneficial Use of the New Honey-Krushed Wheat Bread When added to Meals.

It was a real baking achievement to produce a tasty, appetizing bread that contained Nature's own curative qualities for constipation. (A local housewife writes of the experiences of herself and family.

"I wish to state that I am personally using the new Honey Krushed Wheat Bread and find it does everything claimed for it. I formerly took two and three cathartic a week, I lasked pep and couldn't do my work at times. Since using Honey Krushed I have not taken one dose of medicine and now feel just fine. I am glad to give my endorsement to this product and wish to recommend it to everyone for its energy giving qualities."

In addition to a remarkable bread, with whole crushed wheat as the foundation, th mixture of pure honey instead of sugar and a secret process, gives it a more appetizing flavor than ordinary bread. It comes in an individual cellophane wrapper, easily identified. It is perfectly sliced and makes grand toast.

At dinner this evening, more families will serve Honey Krushed Wheat Bread than any other. Mothers everywhere believe it is best for children. It helps build strong, vigorous bodies. But more than that, for older members of the family, for those who have been troubled with constipation it is of great benefit.

Wherever Honey Krushed Wheat Bread has been served regularly even for so short a period as ten days, consumers report that poor functioning of the bowels has been greatly relieved and in many cases entirely eliminated. Is not only tender and delicious, pleasing in appearance and appetizing of flavor, but, the actual benefits are many.

This remarkable formula was perfected after much research and identification of Honey Krushed has been made easy by introducing this original loaf wrapped in a new type cellophane wrapper. Look for the extra coating of crushed wheat on the crust.

Whenever you buy Honey Krushed Wheat Bread you are sure to have been delivered to your dealer's grocery day. There is no chance of getting a stale loaf. And, because this wonderful loaf is packed full of the goodness and vitamins required for digestion. Ask for it.

Exercise Unnecessary

Exercise, it has been found, is not necessary for laying hens, says the Missouri Farmer. Since eggs are made from surplus, it is logical to believe the less energy expended in exercise the more surplus there will be for the manufacture of eggs. In visiting the hoppers, the watering tank, nests, fly trap on roosts and in ranging over the laying house pens in confinement get enough exercise for their daily egg production needs. This is not true however, where hatchability of eggs is concerned. Hens whose eggs are to be hatched should be given exercise particularly some six or eight weeks prior to hatching time. Lack of exercise in breeders makes for weak germs and weak chicks. Breeding hens should be given range out of doors whenever possible.
